Top Seller. Oh, may our heart sleep, on this holy day, in the Shroud of our divine Father, wrapped in His sweat and in His blood; and there may it be, as if at the very death of this divine Saviour, buried in the sepulchre, with a constant resolution to remain always dead to itself until it rises again to eternal glory.

Although the Fourier images are axially symmetrical, yet I think there is a good reason for this. Interestingly too, that where the blood stains appear, Shroud for a Painted Beauty is no image underneath on the fibrils, suggesting that the image had been made last after the blood stains; obviously, an artist would have worked in reverse, painting the image and then applying the blood stains. In fact, from the analysis of the pictures of the dorsal side of the Shroud taken in 1978 it ensued that in correspondence with the face and the hands, there is an image also in the . If you find large quantities of calcium carbonate then it is indicative of fossils. These are not questions about who produced the object, they are not about theology or philosophy, they are all about the how the artifacts imprinted images might have been produced, especially back in antiquity. The coin images on the eyes are from the first century.
