The latter does not critique the process or activity of classification. Inne

One needs a logic of relation ... Hegel famously uses the example of a living organism thus displaying the relation, in his thinking, between truth and life... .. But if truth is organic, if it is produced and not just brutally given, then one is dealing with things analogous to buds, blossoms, and fruits. Not only is Jesus qua finite logically related to the divine, but so is the Christian community.

By Nicholas Adams. Theology is rather like natural science: it classifies the relationship alters the understanding of the two terms.
