The study group consisted of 21 non-medicated right-handed female BPD patients. Br J Dev Psychol 33 2 In this first study of the neural underpinnings of mental state discrimination in borderline patients using RMET, several limitations should be mentioned: first, our sample comprised seven BPD patients with comorbid PTSD. This circumstance leads then to a situation where relationships are one-sidedly focused on the needs of the borderline patient.

To sum up, the results of the present study support the paradox hypothesis of K total score ranges between 0 and
